ASU History

Ain Shams University is the third oldest Egyptian University. It was founded in July 1950 under the name “Ibrahim Pasha University”. It participated with the two earlier universities – Cairo University (Fouad I) and Alexandria University (Farouk I) - in fulfilling the mission of universities and meeting the increasing demand of university students. It included a number of faculties and institutes that were recently developed into university. After the 23 July Revolution, it was suggested that the names of Egyptian Universities should have roots and landmarks from the country. Thus, on 23 February 1945, the name of the university was to “Heliopolis” and then it was changed in the same year to its current name: “Ain Shams University”. Ain Shams is the Arabic translation of “Heliopolis” or “Iwnw” which was the oldest university in history.

“Iwnw University” was founded about 5000 years ago. It was very famous and it was an important center for knowledge and education, especially in astronomy, engineering and medicine. Perhaps the perfect example of knowledge and skillfulness in “Iwnw” teachers is “Imhotep”. He was the chief priest, minister and designer since 2700 BC as he designed large stone structures which were known in history as “Djoser” in “Sakara”. The Westcar Papyrus also states that the founder of the Fifth Dynasty was the curate of “Iwnw” University before his reign. The most important achievement of “Iwnw” University was the call to worship the sun god, Aten, by Akhenaten who called for the ideas of “Iwnw” priests.

University Logo (Obelisk and 2 Falcons)

This shows the extent of connection between the name and the history of the University. The obelisk represents the House of Life in the city of "Iwnw" while the two falcons symbolize the Egyptian god at that time. The University is now located in the area of Al-Zaafaran Palace which was built under the rule of Khedive Ismail. The palace was named as such because the area surrounding it was famous for saffron plantations.

The Palace was used to host the Egyptian University administration offices when it was founded in 1925. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs previously used it as a guest house for VIP visitors. The Palace also witnessed the signing of the 1936 treaty between Egypt and Great Britain. In 1952, it became the administrative headquarters of Ain Shams University and a major educational and cultural institution. Ain Shams University is fully aware of the challenges and it bears, along with other Egyptian Universities, the hard responsibility of creating the generation. It is aware and proud of its identity and traditions and is also ready to create a better future for Egypt. Ain Shams University played an undeniable role in developing the cultural and educational life in Egypt and in enriching human knowledge in general.

The University includes 19 faculties and 2 higher institutes. In 1950, there were only 8 faculties: Arts, Law, Commerce, Science, Engineering, Medicine, Agriculture and the faculty of Girls for Arts, Science and Education. In 1969, the Faculty of Education, which was known as the Teachers College since 1880, became the 9th faculty in the university. In 1973, Al-Alsun became the 10th faculty in the university and the history of this faculty dates back to 1835. In 1994, a decree was issued to establish two new faculties: Pharmacy and Dentistry and both faculties. The Faculty of Computer and Information started operating the next year. The faculty of Specific Education joined in 1998. The Faculty of Nursing was founded in 1980 and the Faculty of Postgraduate Education of Childhood was founded as an institute in 1981 and in 2017, it became a faculty and the Environment Institute was founded in 1982; also became a faculty in 2021. Recently, the faculty of Archaeology was established in 2020 and the faculty of Veterinary Medicine in 2021.

Ain Shams University includes eight campuses, all located in Cairo. The University Administration Building, the Faculties of Arts, Law, Science and Computer and Information are all located in the main campus in El Khalifa El-Maamoun Street, El Abaseya. The Faculties of Commerce, Al-Alsun, Pharmacy, Dentistry, Postgraduate Studies of Childhood and the Faculty of Postgraduate Studies of Environment, along with Ain Shams University Specialized Hospital are all located in the 2nd campus on the other side of the above mentioned street. The Faculties of Medicine and Nursing are located in the University Hospitals in the 3rd campus in El Abaseya. The Faculties of Engineering, Specific Education, Education, the Faculty of Girls for Arts, Science and Education and the Faculty of Agriculture are located each on its own in a campus in El Abaseya, Heliopolis and Shubra El Kheima respectively.

Student Admission

The student acceptance statements, issued by the General Department for Foreign Student Admission and Scholarships, are examined by the Central Administration for International Student Affairs on the Ministry application portal to make sure that the student is a nominee of one of the faculties of Ain Shams University and send them to the faculty. Accordingly, the student is allowed to complete the registration process, pay the tuition fees and expenses, attend classes regularly and attend the exams but the final exams results are withhold until the arrival of the original document file.

The files of the nominated international students are received by the General Department for Foreign Student Admission and Scholarships after revising the files by the Central Administration for International Student Affairs and making sure of the files attachments to prepare them to be sent to the concerned faculties with an official letter. Only then can students undergo the following:

- The medical examination is performed for the new students.
- The student fills in a division entry form in the faculties that include divisions and departments.
- The students pay the tuition fees and expenses according to the bylaws

University Dormitories

The General Administration of University Dormitories offers special services for free to students during their stay:

Egyptian Currency

The Egyptian currency is called the Egyptian pound and its official symbol is £E, LE, or EGP. The Egyptian pound has many sub-units - the main unit is the qirsh, as a pound has 100 piastres. The most famous banknotes that you will see are the 200 EGP, 100, 50, 20, 10, 5, and 1 coins, as each note has its currency clearly written on it. The most famous coin you'll see is the pound. You can convert your foreign currencies into Egyptian pounds from your nearest bank. To view the standard exchange rates for the Egyptian pound, please visit the Central Bank of Egypt website.

Important Note:

- Try not to have foreign currency with you, and convert your money into Egyptian pounds.
- Keep your money and personal belongings in a hidden pocket when walking on the street.
- Try to put most of your money from your bank account and not cash. You will find several ATMs in Cairo when you need to retrieve funds from your bank account.
- It is preferable that you hold a valid credit card of your own from your home country, since Egyptian banks do not allow those under the age of 18 to open their own account here.
- Do not deal with transportation facilities, restaurants or shopping stores in foreign currency.
